Instructional Materials:

Designed to supplement standard U.S. history and civics textbooks, the Bill of Rights Institute developed the following educational resources from September - December 2016:

The Bill of Rights Institute developed one new curriculum during this period. The Gilded Age and Progressive era is an eight lesson curriculum that looks at the history of the United States between 1876-1924. The curriculum asks students to consider questions about how a republican society deals with significant economic, social, technological, and demographic change. The curriculum invited students to find parallels to political and social debates in the country today.

The Bill of Rights Institute also added 10 new narratives to its Heroes and Villains curriculum. These lessons focus on the development of civic virtues and asks students to evaluate and learn from the actions of historic actors.

In addition, the Bill of Rights Institute continually updated and delivered the following online instructional material:

BillofRightsInstitute.org: This website provides teachers with free lesson plans and additional educational resources on the Constitution and Bill of Rights. We received 2,119,515 unique page views throughout the 2015-2016 year.

DocsofFreedom.org: This online textbook focuses on primary sources to teach students about history, government, and economics. The other
